The Cleveland Foodbank needed a consultant to act as their project manager responsible for the selection of a design-build firm to construct a state-of-the-art office/warehouse/distribution center. The project was funded through private donations and constructed on a Brownfield site. In addition, the facility is the first building in Cleveland to earn the LEEDS Green Design Certification.

“Mark Horton offers expertise and knowledge that few of us undertaking a large scale construction project have. It is a comfortable feeling knowing that our organization had solid advice about what we should and shouldn’t expect and how to evaluate costs. In our case, we were able to assure the donors who made our project possible that we didn’t build too much or too little and that their resources were used responsibly.”
